

Arius the Libyan: A Romance of the Primitive Church (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Arius the Libyan: A Romance of the Primitive Church

The first great crisis in the history of the Christian Church occurred during the third century after the birth of Jesus. This centered about the remarkable figure of Arius, termed by his opponents the great heresiarch. The Arian controversy, however, was but the climax to a series of sectarian disputes that had shaken the Church from its beginnings. All of these disputes were probably surface expressions of a deeper struggle between ecclesiasticism and Primitive Christianity, the end of which was marked by the Council of Nicæa and the final downfall of Arianism. Of Arius himself but little is known, and that, in a great measure, is gleaned from the writings of his enemies. He was born in Libya on the northern coast of Africa (some writers say Alexandria), about 256 A. D., and is said to have been a pupil of Lucian of Antioch, who suffered martyrdom in the year 312 by the order of the Emperor Diocletian. Arius was ordained deacon by Peter, Bishop of Alexandria, and was later made a presbyter by Peter's successor, Achillas, who placed him in charge of a church called Boucalis, in Alexandria.
