Excerpt from Sermon, Occasioned by the Death of His Excellency Dewitt Clinton, Late Governor of the State of New York: Preached in St. Goerges Church, N. Y., On Sunday, February 24, 1828

The kingdom of Christ is not of this world. It is spiritual; and the place of its erection is in the hearts of men. It outlives the limited term of human existence on earth, and its objects transcend in dignity, as in duration, all the inferior, transitory, concerns of the present scene. Yet the subjects of Christs government, while they owe a paramount allegiance to Him, and are principally concerned in rendering obedience to his laws, in extending his hallowed empire in the world, and in preparing to exult with all his faithful people in the final triumph of their heavenly king, are also the subjects or citizens of various civil governments, and amenable to human laws.
