I quote from the fifteenth annual report, 1894, of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association: Think of an army of 16,242 children from our tenements and gutters who have been given in these schools their first ideas of truth, honesty, and good will to their fellows. Manning, principal of the Webster Public School. She says that before the days of kindergartens her pupils from the Barbary Coast swore, fought, stole, and acted like the young savages that they were. Their training had been the precocious street education in vice. Now, since the establishment of the kindergartens, every year sees an improvement in the character of the new pupils. They have been taught the cardinal virtues. They are, to quote her words, clean, self-respecting, eager for knowledge. It is a rare thing now to find a child that does not know it is wrong to steal. If you meet one, you may be sure he has never been in a kindergarten. When our Tennessee kindergarten was started, six or seven women from the Central Church were on hand, besides the teachers; and it took the combined efforts of them all to secure any semblance of an orderly procedure in the hall, swarming with children. It seemed almost as if there ought to be one woman for each child; but in a few weeks order grew out of chaos, as the children began to learn what was expected of them. Every year since has been easier, because of the presence in the school of a large number who have been there before.

Other signs of improvement are noticeable.
