

The History of Ireland, from the Earliest Authentic Accounts, to the Year 1171, Vol. 2 of 2: Since Which Period It Has Been Annexed to the Crown of England (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The History of Ireland, From the Earliest Authentic Accounts, to the Year 1171, Vol. 2 of 2: Since Which Period It Has Been Annexed to the Crown of England It is probable that a reformation would sooner have become more public and general by those means than it did, if the attention of the nation had not been drawn off from subjects of this nature by the foreign wars, which Crimthán and his successors engaged them in. The celebrated Cathall, toward the end of the second century, we are told by several foreign writers cited by Usher [a], was Archbishop of Tuam, in province of Munster, and that he converted the province to the Faith of Christ, with the assistance of twelve suffragan Bishops, whom he ordained. It must be owned that the Irish histories say. Nothing of such an event, and notwithstanding the many authorities cited by the Primate for it, one cannot help suspecting that there must be some mistake. The mistake indeed, I believe, is not. In the fact, but in the date; and the writers which the Primate cites are much divided in their opinions about the time in which Cathall lived.
